landscapes & nature

The Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust (WWT) used this image for the March page of their 2010 calendar of (rare in the UK) Whooper swans and (not so common) Pochard ducks. I took it at the Welney WWT centre in January 2009. It was a long, cold day but well worth it.

commercial work

Having many friends in the music industry, I have photographed a number of performers for their album covers designs. Recently, a country singer/songwriter produced an album in Nashville and used several of my landscape images to illustrate the CD.

Commercial photo shoots have taken me up and down the county recently, from London to Newcastle, to photograph products, buildings and trade shows. I took a portrait of Neil Kinnock for a local firm's annual report and photographed the clothing catalogue for the Salvation Army Trading Company earlier this year. This image of their stand at the International BETT education trade show in Olympia was taken for Milton Keynes firm, DRS. I also took the images seen on their stand.

new products

The photo-box is an attractive coffee-table box available in two sizes, which holds 30 pre-mounted prints. Photographs can now be shared with friends over coffee like we used to in the old days. Clients who have seen this product like it and it looks likely to be very popular. Price: from £175.

Digital photo frames have improved in appearance, pixels and image quality recently. I can now supply you with a quality photo-frame and optimise your images for it. The photo-frame works equally well around the house or in the office to promote your products and services. Logos and text can be included with the images. Price: from £100.

new equipment

In February I replaced all my cameras with the latest models from Canon. I now have their highest image quality camera to date and a fast camera for action and telephoto work. I also replaced my studio equipment last year in favour of Canon's infrared-controlled flashguns. This system allows me to work quickly without any trailing leads.

weddings

Despite the recession, some people are still brave enough to get married and I have a number of bookings for 2010 and 2011. Weddings are hard work but great fun. This handsome couple were married in Bedford last June.

training

In the days of film, I co-ran a photography training company for ten years, which was supported by Kodak. Now I am teaching digital photography to all levels from hobbyist photographers to would-be professionals. I am going to Norway soon to discuss photography training plans with a local travel company.
